On 18 May 2016, in the movie theatre "Tuskanac" in Zagreb, the film "Aristophanes in Dnopolje" by Natasa Milojevic was screened, along with the staging of an exhibition of female portraits titled "For me to be me" and an exhibition of organic products and hand-woven items made by women's associations from Licko Petrovo Selo, Gracac and Korenica.

The film "Aristophanes in Dnopolje" is about women returnees to Croatia and the day-to-day challenges faced in the towns and villages of the Lika region. The organisation of this multidisciplinary event was supported by the Embassy of the Republic of Serbia in Zagreb and the Serb National Council (SNV). The event was attended by representatives of the diplomatic corps, members of numerous NGOs from the Republic of Croatia, representatives of the Serbian community from around Croatia, along with numerous media representatives. The Ambassador of the Republic of Serbia in Zagreb, Mira Nikolic, and President of the SNV Milorad Pupovac addressed the guests.
