

On the eve of the upcoming general election in the United Kingdom, the Embassy of the Republic of Serbia in London organized a panel discussion with Steven Erlanger, The New York Times London bureau chief, about the snap elections in the United Kingdom and their impact on the future relations of the United Kingdom with the European Union and the United States. A considerable number of the diplomatic corps representatives took part in the panel, which was organized in cooperation with the Diplomatic Press Attachés' Association of London.
