

A showcase of decorations, medals, thank-you notes and other exhibits on the involvement, courage and suffering of the Serbian military in World War I opened November 19-26 at the Consulate General in Toronto. The occasion for the exhibition was to mark the signing of the truce in World War I, as well as the interest of the Serbian community in Canada, among whom are descendants of Salonica Front soldiers, to exhibit to the public part of their inherited, private collections of decorations and distinctions of exceptional value.

The opening of the exhibition was attended, among others, by Ontario MP Tom Rakocevic, Consul General of Poland Krzysztof Grzelczak, United States Consul April Heine and Vice Consul Owen Fletcher, Consul of Northern Macedonia Adnan Memed, Consul of Mexico Louis Castanet, Professors at the University of Toronto and York University and many others. Opening the exhibition, the guests were addressed by Consul General Vasilije Petkovic, who presented the historical facts about the Great War in Serbia and the participation of Canadian volunteers in the medical corps.

Members of the organizing committee of the exhibition, including Mr. Boško Petrović, President of the Serbian Red Cross Society and other officials, standing in front of the exhibition.
